Born during the Great Depression, Bob was one of 10 children who lived with their parents on Blossom Street in Boston's West End. But on a bleak November night in 1936 Bob's father, a decorated World War I veteran, was killed in a fall from the fire escape outside their apartment. The freak accident at the height of the Depression sent the entire family into depths of emotional and financial despair. Within two years, Bob's over-wrought mother watched as the state stepped in and took away her children: All were suffering from malnutrition. It wasn't that she stopped loving them. It's that she no longer could cope with the nightmare that had engulfed them all. For two years Bob was shuttled from a hospital to a convalescent home in Wellesley and then to the Long Island Hospital in Boston Harbor. His best chance for happiness came and went when a couple in North Reading tried to adopt the then 4-year-old boy. But Bob's mother refused to sign the adoption papers, hoping to eventually reunite her family. A year later, Bob was placed with three of his brothers on a farm in western Massachusetts, where his foster parents told the boys to call them Ma and Dad and to accept the other foster children already living there. Their real mother found where they were living and somehow made her way to Haydenville, walking up the road carrying shopping bags full of oranges, bananas and Italian cookies. Reluctantly, the foster mother invited her into her kitchen but told her she was never to come again. Even though he was only a preschooler, Bob says he vividly recalls his mother walking away from the farm that day. It felt like a knife had been plunged into his heart, he says. What followed were six years of cruelty, long hours of farm work seven days a week and humiliation. Visitors who asked about the children were told, "They're only state kids." The hunger, fear, severe beatings and other punishments were nothing compared to the ultimate horror of unexpected, unexplained changes of foster homes. A black car would pull up and the "state lady" would take one of Bob's brothers. He was never told what happened to them. Then one day the "state lady" came for him. Bob was told to gather his few clothes, put them in a cardboard box and come with her. The scene was repeated over and over until an emotionally fragile 17 year-old was suddenly on his own. He enlisted in the Marines in time to serve in the Korean War. Later, Bob learned more of the fate of his mother, who spent much of her tormented life living in bus stations and frantically trying to locate and visit her scattered family. At her funeral, a priest asked God to forgive her of her sins, but she was far more victim than sinner. Now 65, Bob is reflecting on his life and the fate of his brothers and sisters who were scattered to the winds, and has written his experiences in a book entitled "State Kid." This rare eyewitness account of live inside the system should be required reading for the next commissioner of the Department of Social Services. The bestselling author of "American Theocracy" reveals how the U.S. financial sector has hijacked the economy and put America's global future at risk.

The botanical history of Britain and North West Europe has a dark and a light side. Plants have been used as weapons to harm people, taken deliberately as addictive drugs and also employed as tools in witchcraft and used as magical amulets. Yet many of these same plants have been medicinally vital to numerous European communities; as the author notes, frequently the only difference between a benevolent medicine and a poison is dosage. In this book, which is richly illustrated with modern colour photographs and illustrations from herbals, Robert Bevan-Jones brings together a wealth of documentary and archaeo-botanical sources to discuss the cultural, social (and anti-social) role of the fifty most significant species of poisonous plants and fungi found in Britain, either as natives or as introductions. An introductory essay puts into context the development of British society's knowledge of toxic plants; the 'cultural botany' applied in Britain today has evolved over thousands of years, absorbing information from European texts and importing useful plants from Europe, such as the mandrake. The book's central A to Z section - from aconite to yew - then informs the reader about the history and uses of 43 species of poisonous plants, especially those that have a documented history of medicinal usage. Four important fungi species - death cap, liberty cap, fly agaric and ergot - also have separate essays. As well as the plants' histories and appearance, their chemical constituents receive coverage; these give them powerful and diverse properties, which demand our admiration and respect. The book aims to add to the knowledge offered by field identification guides, and help reduce the risk associated with accidental ingestion. Case histories are given in as much detail as possible and the information will hopefully help the reader understand the properties of plants they may encounter, either in an archaeological, botanical or horticultural context. Most of these plants can yet be found growing in woodlands, parks, botanical gardens, roadsides, waterways, churchyards and abbey sites. This is an essential book not only for botanists and historical ecologists, but also for anyone interested in the toxic plant traditions of Britain and Europe.

Debunks commonly accepted fallacies from history, including that George Washington was the first U.S. president. Johnny Appleseed was a fictitious character, and a cold can be brought on by chilly weather.
